

How to deal with the oxidation of photovoltaic panels

Overview

By routinely inspecting, cleaning, and possibly treating panels, solar energy users can mitigate oxidation's adverse effects. Further, investing in quality products and materials contributes to sustaining peak performance levels for years to come. Corrosion is a common and natural electrochemical process that can affect a wide variety of the materials seen in a solar PV system from polymers (common in solar modules) to metals used in each main component. Introducing solar system components into a severely corrosive environment can accelerate. Oxidation on solar panels can degrade their efficiency, necessitating immediate action to restore performance. Cleaning methods such as using distilled water and soft cloths can. Most PV modules in the industry have a standard lifespan of 25 years, but some leading companies in the solar industry like Maxeon Solar have developed this technology to create solar panels lasting for 40 years or more, covered by a 40-year warranty. Researchers from industry, academia, and the U.S. This primarily involves preventing corrosion. We've written a guide with the key details to consider about this process. Let's explore what you should know.
