

Is it legal to buy and sell idle photovoltaic panels

Overview

---

We'll explain how solar leases and power purchase agreements (PPAs) work, what a UCC-1 filing really is (and why it's usually nothing to panic about), and how to spot red flags in solar contracts before you sign. The legal landscape for selling solar panels is complex and varies by state, creating potential confusion. Navigating these requirements is a matter of compliance for the seller and a point of protection for the consumer. The goal is to give you practical, jargon-free guidance so you understand your rights. A solar power purchase agreement, or PPA, is a contract where a homeowner agrees to let a solar company install panels on their roof or property without paying for the equipment upfront. With solar panel technology, you can do just that. Unfortunately, some states make this harder to achieve with restrictions on solar energy. Another study from the National Renewable Energy Laboratory (NREL) states that homes with solar sell faster than homes without green options, have higher home resale value, offer substantial tax credits, and have lower utility bills.
